

Diplomatic License Plates

What plates can tell you about their drivers...

They may appear to be a random assortment of letters and numbers, but the government uses a specific system for coding diplomatic plates.

The first letter is a status code identifying the car's owner as a diplomat, foreign consul member, UN Secretariat employee, or non-diplomatic staff member. These codes define the diplomatic immunity rights of the car and driver.

The next two letters are country codes that the government created for these licenses. Don't bother trying to guess which letters stand for which country using these codes, they have no correlation to the country's name and were designed this way to protect foreign dignitaries and prevent people from targeting vehicles of diplomats from certain countries.
